Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Manchester and the Movement for National Elementary Education, 1800-1870 We are all familiar with the commonplace that education is a vital concern of everybody; and sometimes we are tempted to draw the conclusion that it is one of those subjects which ought to be withdrawn from the arena of party politics and settled by common consent of all well-disposed citizens. But from the very fact that education cannot be confined to any one department of life, but touches in turn, in England at all events, religion, morals, politics, social ideals, trade and health, as well as knowledge, any educational proposal must always be accompanied by keen conflict of opinion; in fact principles are often more deeply involved in educational movements than in almost anything else, and one has only to trace the history of any one of the numerous sources of our educational system to realise that in the past it has always been so. In national affairs, however, the currents of opinion and the enormous toil of propagating ideas are not easy to follow....
