To the still mightier Present, from the midst Of all these vestiges of centuries gone, That strew the plains and hills around I ask The question thousands have thus asked before, And get the common answer--echo! Here, Green on the crownd acclivities, or dark In the dim twilight of oerarching trees That clothe the valleys, we behold remains Of human toil and triumph and dismay, Oer which the oak that counts five hundred years Spreads his protecting branches: --walls of earth; Tlascalan gateways; sacrificial mounds; The altars of a worship we know not; And, beautiful in their silence, tombs of men Who died before the parent tree had cast The seed from which arose this hoary trunk, That lies so low at last! But though the eye Meets these rude records, turn whereer it will, () They tell no story that is understood, Of all the human love and hate and pride, nd all the joy, and strife and agony, That once were known within these Sylvan homes, So populous then, so void and silent now: And vainly leans the listening ear to catch A sound or syllable revealing more Than these mute records to the eye disclose. Pierce far into the depths of these old woods, Where seem to meet the Present and the Past; Hasten not hence, but with still lingering steps Move to and fro; stand on the tumulus That rises oer a chieftains ashes; trace...
