Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 222 pages. Elizabeth Charingworth stumbles on her way to meet with Professor Brickendon, and is knocked unconscious. When she awakens, she is in the arms of the man of her dreams--700 years before she was born. EXCERPT: The smoke was the cast of pitch, such as to make sight impossible but the sounds were crystal-clear. To my ears came the sound of clattering hooves, metallic grating as weapons struck other weapons, the terror-filled screams of children, women crying out in despair and men shouting orders of destruction. As the smoke momentarily thinned, I could detect the source of the fire; the mounted warriors had set the fields ablaze--likewise, the thatch-roofed huts. Fighting back against the horsemen proved unrewarding for the defenders, as they were disorganized and without effective weaponry. The equestrians wore armored breastplates emblazoned with a black cross upon a crimson heart and were armed with shields and sabers. As quickly as it had begun, the battle ended, leaving bodies scattered throughout the immediate vicinity. The coppery stench of blood was as abundant as the smudge that filled the air. Except for the cries of the vanquished who had been spared and the thundering of the horses, all else had stilled. The mounted marauders gathered in the middle of the Village to survey their success. They numbered but thirteen yet had fought as fiercely as a hundred demons unleashed from Hell. Among them, there appeared the leader. A man much larger in stature than the others, he wore a metal helmet that obscured his face; only his eyes were visible. Even through the thick smoke, they appeared as dark as death. A short distance from the Village, standing appalled at what had transpired before me, I remained diminutive and motionless. Nonetheless the attention of...
